Baby Boy, you hurt me with this one. If I had known Saturday night would be our last conversation, my last “I love you,” I would have made that conversation a little longer. But even then, I could tell you were tired. I know you were ready, son.

I thank God for the 36 years He loaned you to us. You were a good son, and in those 36 years, you touched so many lives. I just don’t know how to feel with my first love gone from this earthly place.

I wish I could see that beautiful smile again—the smile that could light up every room. Your smile was so contagious, and your presence was such a gift.

Baby, this is a different kind of hurt, one that I can’t even put into words. But knowing that you are at peace gives me a sense of peace. Still, when you left me, you left a void in my heart that I cannot explain.

Son, take your rest. I know you were ready. Don’t worry about the kids or Shai—I’ve got them. I promise to love them, protect them, and keep them close until we meet again.

My Baby Boy. My Big Teddy Bear. My Gentle Giant.

I love you, son. You may be gone from this earthly place, but you will never, ever be forgotten. Your smile, your love, your laughter, and the lives you touched will live on forever.

Rest peacefully, my baby boy. Mama loves you, and I’ll see you on the other side.
